Passage 1: A Yummy Invention

by Tracy Vonder Brink

1 Oops! Frank Epperson forgot to bring his cup inside. He'd made a fruity drink by mixing a flavored powder and water together, but he left it on the porch overnight. The cup had his drink and the mixing stick still inside it.

2 The night was freezing cold. The next morning, Frank went outside and saw his cup. His drink had frozen. He pulled on the mixing stick. The frozen drink came out of the cup. It looked like a big, fruity icicle on a stick. Would it taste good? He licked the flavored ice. Yum!

3 Frank never forgot the icy treat he'd invented back in 1905, when he was 11 years old. When he grew up and had kids of his own, he made ice pops for them. Then he wondered . . . could he sell his dessert?

4 Frank took his ice pops to an amusement park. Everyone loved what he'd made! At first, he called his invention the Epsicle, because his last name was Epperson. But his kids didn't like the sound of that. They called their dad "Pop," so they came up with a different name, the Popsicle.

5 Popsicles were a hit! Frank made new flavors. People loved those too. Then a big company bought Frank's recipe. They made more and more Popsicles.

6 Today you can buy Popsicles on one stick or on two. They come in many fruit flavors and even in chocolate.

Passage 2:
Who Invented the Ice Cream Cone?

by Laurel Plausini

7 People all across America enjoy ice cream cones. They are an excellent way to enjoy a scoop or two of your favorite ice cream on a hot day.

8 But who invented this delicious treat?

9 No one knows for sure. Ice cream shops in Italy are said to have sold something similar to cones as far back as 1807. An ice cream maker in New York City is said to have made an edible cup for ice cream in 1903.

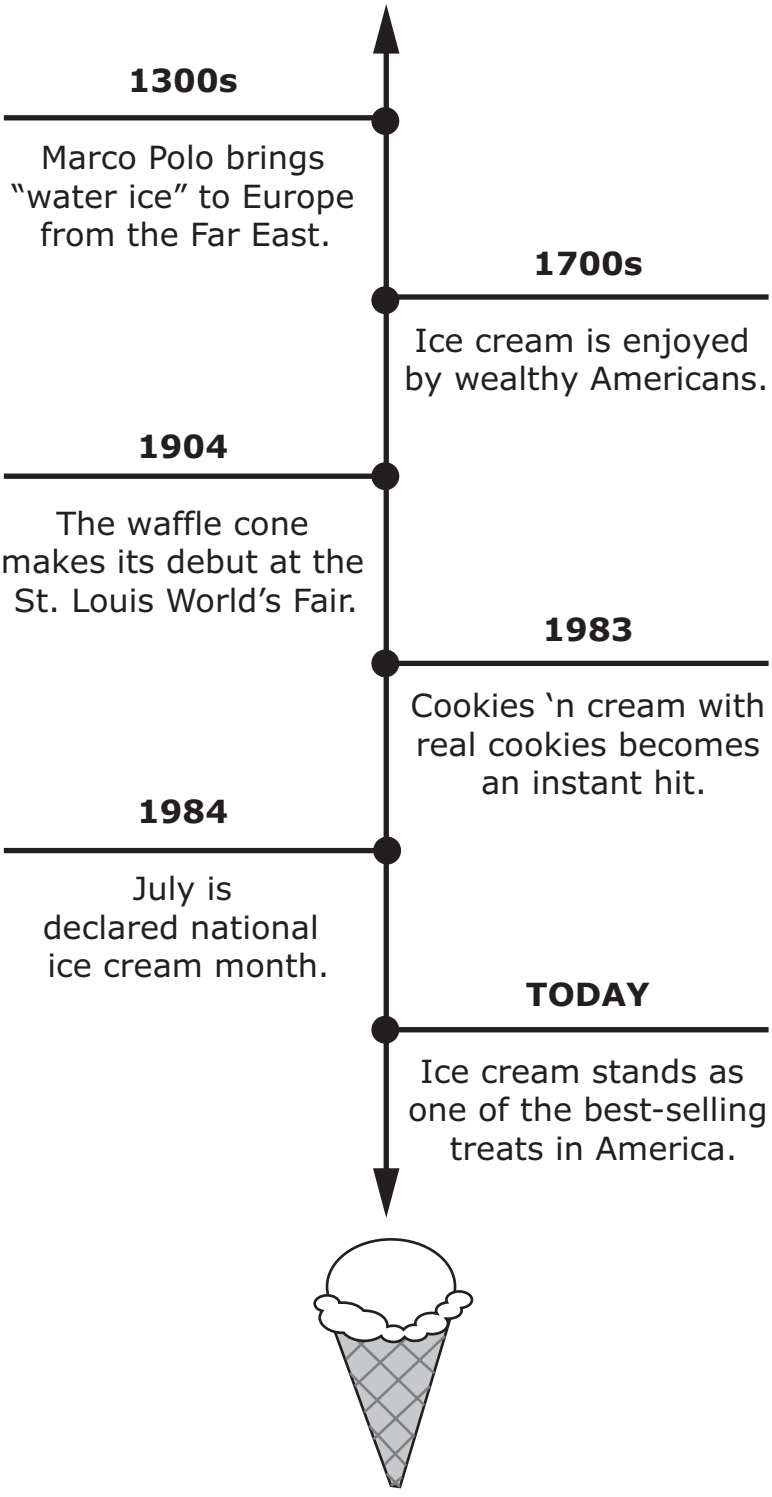

10 But the most popular story about the invention of the cone came a year later. The city of St. Louis was hosting a World's Fair in 1904. A vendor was selling scoops of his delicious ice cream at the fair. His ice cream was so popular on that day that he ran out of dishes to serve people. He was in a sticky situation.

11 Ernest Hamwi was selling crispy waffles at the booth next door. He saw the pickle his fellow businessman was in. He quickly thought of a solution. He took one of his waffles and rolled it up into the shape of a cone. He gave it to the vendor after it cooled off. The vendor put ice cream inside the cone and sold it to customers. Everyone soon wanted a taste of this new invention. Many believe this is the event that made the ice cream cone popular.

12 Hamwi's quick thinking resulted in great success. He soon started his own company called Cornocopia Waffle Oven Company. He promoted his cones to fairs all across America. They were a big hit.

13 No matter how the cone came to be, this happy invention has brought joy to millions of people.

When Seven DeSwapp Hopped

by Bronchelle Parker

1 Seven DeSwapp was so excited when she woke up early Saturday morning. She was going to the beach.

2 Every summer, the DeSwapps took a special family trip to the beach. And every summer, Seven's big brother, Ras, found the best treasures there. Last year, he saw dolphins diving into the ocean.

3 "Eureka," he would cry when he found a treasure.

4 Seven called him Ras the Terrific Treasure Finder. This year, she wanted to be a Terrific Treasure Finder, too.

5 "Eureka." She practiced on her way downstairs with Ras. The night before, she had made a list of all the treasures she wanted to find at the beach. A sandcastle with a moat. A starfish. And a cute baby crab.

6 But when Seven and Ras got to the living room, Ms. DeSwapp did not look ready for the beach. She was wearing sneakers. Not sandals. And she had on a big backpack. Not a bathing suit. Seven and Ras scratched their heads, trading puzzled looks.

7 "Surprise," sang Ms. DeSwapp. She tossed each of them a sleeping bag. "This year, we're kicking it up a notch. Bye-bye, beach. We're going camping in the mountains."

8 "Sweet." Ras jumped up and down, his dreadlocks dancing about his head.

9 Seven's heart sank.

10 "Are there sandcastles in the mountains, Mama?" she asked.

11 "No, silly," giggled Ras. . . .

12 It was a long drive to the mountains. Seven looked out the window. At first, the land looked as flat as the pancakes she ate for breakfast. Then the ground slowly started to rise into giant hills with pointy tops.

13 Seven closed her eyes and tried to imagine what kind of treasures she would find in the mountains. But all she could think of were sandcastles, starfish, and cute baby crabs. . . .

14 Ms. DeSwapp stopped at a perfect spot in the woods to camp. Then up, up went their tent. And up, up went their feet as they set out for a big hike.

15 Seven hiked very carefully, so she wouldn't miss any treasures.

16 "Eureka." She practiced while she searched for treasures over big rocks . . . and under little rocks, too. She searched between the bushy bushes . . . and around the tall, tall trees.

17 When they reached a tiny stream, Seven took a break from treasure hunting.

18 “Whew!” she huffed, squatting to sit on a rock.

19 But just as she did, the rock began to croak like a frog! “Ribbit,” croaked the rock. “Ribbit-ribbit.”

20 Suddenly, six green frogs hopped out from behind the rock.

21 “Ribbit,” they croaked, happily hopping high.

22 Soon, Seven joined in the frogs’ fun. “Ribbit,” she croaked, hopping up and down. “Ribbit-ribbit.”

23 Before long, the DeSwapps were playing a silly game of leapfrog. Seven hopped over Ras. Then she hopped over Ms. DeSwapp. She even hopped over the tiny stream.

24 Bright yellow butterflies greeted Seven on the other side of the stream. Their soft wings tickled her cheeks as they swirled around her head. Then off they flew towards a loud SHHHH coming from the distance.

25 It sounded like rain. SHHHH.

26 Slowly, Seven followed the sound. She crept down the trail on her tiptoes.

27 Closer and closer she came, until she was standing across from a beautiful waterfall. It looked like buckets of water falling from a big cliff with a SHHHH and landing, drop after drop, in a pool.

28 It was the most terrific treasure Seven had ever seen.

29 Just behind her, Ras and Ms. DeSwapp watched the waterfall in wide-eyed amazement.

30 “Sweet find, Seven,” squealed Ras.

31 Bursting with excitement, Seven threw her arms in the air. And in a voice loud enough to shake the mountains, she cried, “Eureka!”

Passage 1: Punky Dunk and the Mouse

by Anonymous

Punky Dunk, very sly, with a wink of his eye
Strolled lazily all through the house;
To the cellar he went and the morning he spent
On a hunt for a fat little mouse.

"Over there by the coal," he said, "Mouse has his hole,
So I'll sit there beside it and wait.
There's a trap with some cheese just as nice as you please,
And Mouse soon will come out for that bait."

Punky sat by the trap, and seemed taking a nap,
But you know that bold Punky was wise.
Though he looked half asleep he was taking a peep
For the gleam of two bright little eyes.

Soon the mouse crept right out and went running about;
Punky smiled to himself and he said:
"I will just let him play in his own foolish way
Till I think that I need to be fed."

But the Mouse, too, was smart, and he got a good start,
Then he leaped, and he saved his wee hide,
For he dashed in a hole that was not near the coal
But was hidden away at one side.

"Ha, Ha!" Punky said as he shook his white head.
"Well, Mouse, you may run if you please,
But I'll eat just the same—'twas for that that I came."
So he reached in the trap for the cheese.

Snip-snap! went the trap—Wasn't that a mishap!
Punky's black little paw was inside.
He leaped and he jumped and he ran and he bumped—
And the Mouse sat and laughed till he cried.

Punky ran up the stairs and he knocked over chairs
And he sprang to the table and dropped,
He "Meowed!" in his fright, for the trap held him tight,
And it was a long time till he stopped.

Baby's mama then came and she said: "What a shame!"
And she took off the trap from his paw,
And she wrapped it in silk and she fed him with milk
And she gave him some fish bones to gnaw.

Passage 2: The Little Thief in the Pantry

by Anonymous

1 "MOTHER dear," said a little mouse one day, "I think the people in our house must be very kind; don't you?" . . .

2 There was a twinkle in the mother's eye as she replied,—

3 "Well, my child, no doubt they are very well in their way, but I don't think they are quite as fond of us as you seem to think. Now remember, Greywhiskers, I have absolutely forbidden you to put your nose above the ground unless I am with you, for kind as the people are, I shouldn't be at all surprised if they tried to catch you."

4 Greywhiskers twitched his tail with scorn; he was quite sure he knew how to take care of himself, and he didn't mean to trot meekly after his mother's tail all his life. So as soon as she had curled herself up for an afternoon nap he stole away, and scampered across the pantry shelves.

5 . . . A large iced cake stood far back upon the shelf, and Greywhiskers licked his lips as he sniffed it. Across the top of the cake there were words written in pink sugar; . . . he did not know that he was nibbling at little Miss Ethel's birthday cake. But he did feel a little guilty when he heard his mother calling. Off he ran, and was back in the nest again by the time his mother had finished rubbing her eyes after her nap. . . .

6 The next day the naughty little mouse again popped up to the pantry when his mother was asleep; but at first he could find nothing at all to eat, though there was a most delicious smell of toasted cheese.

7 Presently he found a dear little wooden house, and there hung the cheese, just inside it.

8 In ran Greywhiskers, but, oh! "click" went the little wooden house, and mousie was caught fast in a trap.

9 When the morning came, the cook, who had set the trap, lifted it from the shelf, and then called a pretty little girl to come and see the thief who had eaten her cake. . . .

10 "You didn't know it was stealing, did you, mousie dear?" [the little girl] said.

11 "No," squeaked Greywhiskers sadly; "indeed I didn't."

12 Cook's back was turned for a moment, and in that moment tender-hearted little Ethel lifted the lid of the trap, and out popped mousie.

13 Oh! how quickly he ran home to his mother . . . and then she made him promise never to disobey her again, and you may be sure he never did.
